Ending the Unlawful Treatment of Russian Orphans – A Towering Achievement

Trump's Swamp draining policies had been far reaching and extensive. Tackling the scourge of corruption in the Washington Deep State was a key policy for the Trump administration. It was one of the main reasons that Trump had insisted on surrounding himself with the 'best' people. People who he could rely on, people who were loyal and whose integrity could not (and would not) be questioned. However, matters of law and order and civic decency were still at the front of Trump's mind ...

But decency would have to wait until later. Other matters were at hand. The Fake Stream Media had accused Donald Trump's own son Donald Trump Jr. of holding a meeting with some Russians in Trump Tower. FAKE NEWS! It never happened!!! And, even if it did, it was not with Russians, certainly they weren't all Russians. After all, Paul Manafort and Jared Kushner were there too, and they were definitely not Russians ... yet. Well Jared was not anyway (he was a Jew).

Trump loved the Jews because he loved all nations, religions, creeds, colours, and races. He was an equal opportunities President, unlike Obama (the Kenyan) before him, who was forever stirring things up. That boy was quite the racist – and not even a proper American racist, as had been proven many times before. Not that Trump was one to bring it up, he was far too tolerant in his own beliefs and he knew that having a good demeanour and a proper comportment in public matters was very important, especially in matters of state. "You wouldn't catch Trump wearing a tan coloured suit" thought Trump to himself as he straightened his Presidential MAGA cap.

Trump was only glad to have the chance to heal the divisions of hatred left behind by Obama and Hillary (who had even boasted about "going high"- such elitism and she even admitted it!). Not to mention Obama with his "Dog Whistle" politics – he had even refused to condemn 'Black Lives Matter' - the "for all" rights agitators. Trump did not like these "far-from-white-rights" extremists.

But Trump was not one to condemn. He just wanted to help people. So did Don Junior who, having been parented by Donald Senior, had been fortunate to receive the best upbringing by the most attentive and caring father in the history of American parenthood. In fact, it became a model of parenting that Scandinavian nations would come to use as a template, in their attempts to raise their levels of social cohesion to Trumpian levels.

So it was that the true nature of the Trump Tower meeting was one of tender, caring, nurturing. Don Junior had only wanted to talk to the Russians about helping little children. The Russians had many little children who needed to be adopted because they were disabled (and no-one wants little disabled Russian orphans - certainly not the Russians). Donald Trump Senior, as we know, loved little children – especially the disabled ones. So, of course he wanted Junior's meeting to go ahead. But he did not want to know anything about it because he wanted Don Junior to have the thrill of sealing the deal, so Trump Senior made sure that he wasn't anywhere near it – he was at least two floors away.

Fortunately, Don Junior. was bright enough to realise that Trump Senior. would have wanted the meeting to go ahead (even if Trump Senior had known about it – which he didn't) because his daddy really wanted to help little disabled Russian orphans, there were just so many of them.

It had all been Obama's fault – he hated little children, especially the handicapped ones, which is why he had spitefully agreed to the Magnitsky Act - deliberately, so that he could punish innocent children. By preventing wealthy Russian philanthropists from entering the U.S. the children were denied the chance to be escorted to their new homes in the U.S.A. by the kindly old oligarchs.

Trump was furious when he heard about this and pledged to reverse the cruel the Magnitsky Act. But back in 2016, before Trump was President, there was nothing he could do about it – and he definitely didn't know anything about the meeting - because Don Junior said it would be like a burger with nothing in it, except for abolition of something called the “Mad Grisly Fact”. Or was it the “Mad Gits Stay Act”? Trump really was not sure ... because he knew nothing about the meeting ... or the horrible Act (that he detested because was preventing the adoption of little disabled Russian children).

Paul Manafort, the world-famous humanitarian, and Trump's then campaign manager, named the Trump campaign's Russian Ad Option strategy the ‘Call-U-Son’ scheme to reflect its fatherly kindness. It was kind, compassionate and yet intellectually rigorous. Some critics said they were just “acting soft”. But “acting soft”, Trump Senior reasoned, was the only humane way to proceed. Trump was the best at “Act soft” reason. No-one was better at committing “Act soft” reason than Trump.

Fake News – The So-Called ‘Collusion’ Debacle

But then the Washington Post fake news empire tried to say that Don Junior had done a bad thing! And that he had ‘colluded’ with Russia to get dirt on Hillary! And to give the Russian's something back in return that they wanted!

This was a complete distortion of the ‘Call-U-Son’ policy. They even used an email that Donald Junior had himself tweeted to prove how innocent the meeting was. In the email Don Junior had declared “I love it!”. He was obviously referring to the adoption of little disabled children so that they could have a wonderful new life in Trump Senior's emerging utopia. It was the whole point of the ‘Call-U-Son’ scheme, but the lying Washington Post had distorted and twisted Don Junior's words.

Sarah Huckabee Sanders was firm, however, in setting the record straight by telling the assembled fake news media “There is no collusion, and indeed there is no such thing as collusion, it is just a made up word invented by the fake news Washington Post and lying Jim Acosta of CNN. So, collusion doesn't exist and even if it did it wouldn't be a crime. The correct term is ‘Call-U-Son’ and it means ‘kindness in fatherly adoption, for the MAGA fatherland’. Next question, no - I can't take another on this we have a lot to get through, Sean Hannity Fox News ...”.

Hannity, (the world-famous investigative journalist who had once exposed Kenya-gate) then followed up with a blistering question about why the Washington Post were concentrating on Trump Tower when there were still unanswered questions about the Bay of Pigs.

The Washington Post's hit-piece suggesting collusion was a preposterous idea. Putin was so strong a leader that he wanted for nothing. It was a great shame that America was not yet as great as Russia,

Trump mused – he would have to fix that later. For now, he had work to do – protecting his innocent son against the terrible lies about the so-called “Trump Tower Meeting” as any decent father would do. The press had tried to suggest there was something odd about the meeting, but the whole thing was ridiculous. As if there were not at least three or four other meetings in Trump Tower every single year! Trump makes deals after all!!!

Sit Right Down - By “The Fat Waller”

I'm gonna sit right down and write Junior a letter,
And make believe it came from him,
I'm gonna write in CAPSLOCK like I tweet,
And then regret that I can't delete,
Incriminating top to bottom,
The FBI'll be glad they've got 'em.
I'm gonna smile and say, "I did not write that letter,
It's all just lies; I swear it's true"
I'm gonna sit write down and write myself that letter,
'Cos make believe is what I do.

Trump had not been at the meeting and knew nothing about it, so as Don Junior confirmed, his daddy had nothing to do with the letter sent to the press. It was just another fake lie by the mainstream media!

Shortly after this, a Trump staffer happened to mention to a reporter, that Trump Senior had dictated the letter. The press tried to make a big thing of this – but it was not an issue at all! Of course, Trump had dictated the letter – but he did not write it. It was a great letter too – totally accurate.

Story Time ... Off for Good Behaviour

The letter proved just how brilliant Trump was. He did not even have the advantage of knowing anything about the meeting – having never discussed it with Don Junior. Yet it was still one of the greatest pieces of literature since War and Peace by Leo Tolstoy. Coincidentally, Trump, who loved children, had written a children’s story whimsically titled “Warren Pete’s” under the pseudonym Pia Dolls-Joy, in whose name he had penned a first-person nature story.

“Warren Pete’s” was an enchanting tale about Pia’s obsession with her favourite rabbit Pete (or “Warren P” for sort), who loved burrowing mischievously into Pia, while furiously flapping his ears from side to side. It was such a naughty rabbit. Trump did not want everyone to know about his literary prowess (he was far too modest) but he was an incredible storyteller whose flights of fantasy were unbounded.

What an incredibly well-rounded President Trump was. This was something his rigorous diet helped him with. He loved to eat ‘brain’ food. Eric and Don Junior often returned from their African adventures with a case full of the stuff – all-natural goodness. Macaque was one of Trump’s favourites – he was incredibly lucky to have two loving sons who would bring him food from such exotic places. He resolved that one day he would have to visit Macaque and speak to their leader King Louis and his people (the “Shi-Toli” tribe).

Although, King Louis’ country was mostly “Shi-Toli” there were a few other tribes. However, Trump, with his extensive knowledge of world affairs and diplomacy, knew that the various tribes were perfectly content for the outside world to refer to them, collectively, as the “Shi-Tol” nations. Trump was always happy to extend kindness to the “Shi-Tol” nations through his words and deeds. He loved foreigners and ethnic groups.

In fact, Trump loved all the people of the world – so much so that, before he became President, one of his main pre-occupations was organising events to bring people from all over the world together. He was keen, however, to ensure that these events would not become dominated by men; so, he organised many women only events. Trump was well ahead of the #YouToo movement - he was organising women’s events years before the #YouToo movement was even created! It might have been positive discrimination, but Trump was a radical who believed it was important to be very positive about discrimination.

It was after one of those events, as Trump rested in his hotel room, that he had the inspiration for his children’s story (“Warren Pete’s” by Pia Dolls-Joy). On his way back to the hotel, Trump had encountered a couple of young homeless orphans (suffering and disabled by continence issues). He wanted to help them out because he could see how unfair it was that they were left walking the streets whilst he, a rich man from the west, had a comfortable hotel room to relax in for the night.

The answer was simple – they would have the bed in Trump’s room – while he would have to make do with sleeping in the bath. Unfortunately, the bath was not suitable as it was not gold plated, and Trump’s sensitive skin might swell up if he came into contact with its brushed steel faucets. It was late and Trump, a humble man, decided rather than disturbing room service at such a late hour that he would make do with the shower. It was cramped but at least it was golden.

Despite his discomfort, Trump felt a deep sense of satisfaction as he watched the ‘waifs’ play contentedly on the bed. Ironically, the hotel room was the very same one that Obama (the Kenyan) had stayed in a year previously – but Obama had not allowed orphan waifs to play on the bed because he wasn’t as caring as Trump. But then “not all men are created equal” thought Trump who preferred not to judge.

The ‘waifs’ were young lost girls, possibly in their teens who clearly wanted guidance and parenting (they were dire need of instruction). They had probably not had a proper childhood thought Trump – so he needed give them one. So, within the hour, life had been breathed into Warren P’s tale and the Pia Dolls-Joy’s business was complete.

Taxing Miracle (while Booking the Crooks)

The encounter had taken place in Moscow, but Trump had been keen that nothing leaked out. It would have destroyed his reputation as a ruthless businessman if his philanthropy had become common knowledge. The last thing that Trump wanted was for his reputation to be enhanced. He relied on his reputation as a hard-nosed businessman so that he could pursue his covert acts of charity and philanthropy.

This was also the reason that Trump refused to release his tax returns. If the treasury found out how much it owed Trump from his deliberate over-payments of tax through the years, there was a very real danger that the US economy could collapse. There was no way that the country could have afforded to fully repay Trump (as the tax rules would have required). Therefore, it was vital that Trump's support for the US Treasury and, by extension, the world economy remained secret.

Trump knew that he had been foolish to take pity on the young orphans, because he did not want to put the world economy at risk, but he was only human. He had to do something. It was true that he had brought a sense of dignity back to the hotel room that Obama had defiled by selfishly keeping disabled orphans from it, but Trump vowed that one day he would do more.

This was the reason why Trump was so pleased when Paul Manafort (Trump's campaign manager) came to him with an idea to help little disabled Russian orphans. It was typical of Manafort. Trump's fellow philanthropist was one of the best people who had made it his life's work to help others. In particular, he specialised in helping Russians with their financial problems.

Of course, Trump knew none of the details of Manafort's plan – he had simply said “why don't you and Don Junior get on with it – I don't need to know anything about it, I can trust you ... can't I? Oh, and by the way, we can tell the Russians that the Magnitsky act is on the table”.

Trump was a brilliant negotiator. Of course, the Russians would want his help with the orphans – but Trump wanted to make sure that there would be a dividend for the American people too. Trump did not know what it would be, but he was sure that the Russians who, like him were keen on law and order, would possibly be able to help Interpol or some other International organisation with their enquiries into crooked criminals. As it happened, in the end it was Vladimir Assange of the world police who helped out by producing thousands of documents that proved, conclusively, that Hillary Clinton was a crook, because she had allowed Assange and his Russian friends to steal her emails.

A year on from the Presidential campaign and Law and Order was now very strong and because Law and Order was so strong (and powerful), it seemed that the 'Peace Summer' (as people were now calling it) would pass without incident. But then, just when all seemed well, a ridiculous Liberal judge found Sheriff Arpaio, the famous justice warrior of Maricopa County, guilty of contempt of court, just because he refused to ignore evidence.

Some Sheriffs find the law difficult to administer but Arpaio (who was one of the best sheriffs in US history) was able to very quickly assess who to round up when a crime was committed – it was simply the usual suspects. Yes, Arpaio's gift was his decisiveness and clear thinking. For him crime was simply a black and white issue. That was all the evidence he needed - and he refused to ignore it. Trump was upset to see how badly Arpaio had been treated and he vowed to do something about it.

However, as Trump wondered what to do about Arpaio, something wonderful was about to happen - it was time for the Charlottesville Peace Festival! Trump was so delighted that the Charlottesville Peace Festival, arranged in his honour, had started that he even allowed all the televisions in the White House to be switched on so that his staff could watch the historic Hoods-Talk event.

With all the peace that Trump's leadership was bringing it was likely that soon crime would be completely eradicated.

But disaster struck at the festival. Two groups converged on the town of Charlottesville. Both had a lot of very good people (as Trump, generous of heart as ever, was keen to point out). It is true he had been a little disingenuous – one side had been infiltrated by Black Lives Matter activists – where did these people come from?

Tragically, what was to happen next was truly shocking, a terrible crime was about to be committed. A car sped down the street straight at the crowd. The crazed driver did not slow down, and carnage ensued. Nineteen were injured and a young woman, Heather Heyer, lay dead.

The hardest thing to fathom was that the driver had been on the side that was mostly good. Heather had been a good person too, as Trump was quick to acknowledge, but she had got herself into a bad part of the crowd containing protestors. Why did these protestors even have to come? What were they there for? This was a peace festival all about uniting people and making them all feel alt-right. What could possibly be wrong with that?

As for the man who had lost his mind, what could have possibly inspired his violence? This was one of the reasons why Trump constantly drip-fed news bites and tweets, always trying to soothe and calm the nation's tensions. It was one of the motivations for his little rallies. He did them to bring people together. What on Earth could have inflamed the driver's passions in this way? Trump simply could not understand it.

Now, the disgusting fake news media demanded a response from Trump, insensitively reporting the shocking news while people lay injured and others were grieving the loss of the young woman.

Trump was furious with the media, but he was having none of their callous sensationalism. Trump would show them how a President does respect – respectfully. It is normal when we remember a sad event to have a moment's silence – usually a minute – sometimes two. But Trump, the most respectful and dignified President ever, resolved to be silent for a full 72 hours. That's real respect – Decent, Conservative, Republican respect – unlike the faux Liberal respect that Obama (the Kenyan) did while he was in office, deliberately looking sad and so on – just to get a cheap publicity shot. But Trump refused to judge him – he was a Kenyan after all.

Yet again Trump had shown his true colours, even in tragic matters. He knew also that it would have been wrong to comment for other reasons. The driver, despite his terrible crime, had the right to a fair trial and if there was one thing a scholar of law such as Trump knew, it was that, above all, he should not comment on a pending court case,

After all, in matters of law and order, the most important thing is to set a good example, a Presidential example in fact. However, Trump knew that the nation was grieving. He had to find a way to send some sort of signal of hope to soothe the hurt. He realised that, of course the antidote to all the hurt would be a dose of good news. Everyone had felt sad to see Sheriff Arpaio being so unfairly treated by that horrible Liberal judge. Trump knew what to do – he would pardon the law man Arpaio.

Almost as soon as the pardon was announced there as great rejoicing and happiness, a sense of fair play, peace on earth and good will to all men spread through the population. Trump's bold and compassionate pardon for a fine man of the law, whose love for God and the law (well the good conservative laws anyway) was just the tonic that the US required.

Once again, the balance of love and peace was restored. The nation was calm and serene once more. Law and Order had never been more strong and powerful than it was now. The US was now truly MAGA so far as Law and Order was concerned – it was “One nation under Trump, in divisible liberty and in justice for all”.
